My Friends,

On this Father's Day weekend, it gives us a chance to reflect on and celebrate the importance of fatherhood for the welfare of our families and our country. There are so many statistics coming out these days. Fewer people have any religious affiliation. In fact, the 'nones' are now the largest segment of the population. Fewer people are getting married these days. Over 50% do not enter into a marriage commitment. Fewer people are having children. It takes 2.1 persons to replace ourselves. The United States is presently averaging 1.8. So why do I bring up all of these depressing facts up on Father's Day? I hope it illustrates the critical nature of fatherhood for the good of society.

As pastor of a parish, I witness the whole gamut of how fathers carry out their roles in the family. There are fathers who dedicate their whole life to their wife and children. They are active in the lives of their children. They discipline them when they need it. They attend church with them. They are proud of their children and you know that they love them dearly in the way they relate to their children. They are true mentors of their children's development.

At the other end of the gamut are fathers who are not involved in the lives of their children. They are more focused on their own careers and interests. They are not involved in the faith life of the family. Oftentimes, when I fail to see the father at church, it is not long afterward that I hear of the break up of the marriage.

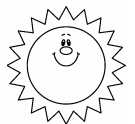

As I look back on my life, we had the blessing of having both parents with us 24/7. At the time I might not have realized it as a blessing but we did everything together. Work was not an option. But as much as we learned a work ethic, we also learned how important were the relationships we shared. Our lives were filled with family, friends and fun!

For those who have/had the benefit of a strong fatherly presence, we give thanks to God today. For those who are not so blessed, we pray to God, our Father, that they will have true father-figures to guide them along the way.
